

Robin Sharma Invited to Speak at the Harvard Business School

Toronto, Canada: The Harvard Business School has invited Robin Sharma (best selling author of The Greatness Guide and The Greatness Guide Book 2) to address its MBA class on leadership and high performance in business. The Harvard Business School prides itself on training leaders who make a difference and students and alumni from the school represent a diverse roster of the globe's most prominent organizations.

The Harvard Business School's event organizers selected Mr. Sharma given his strong track record as a CEO advisor, coach and mentor to top global leaders, and believe the message to Lead Without Title would not only help students succeed and make an impact in their future professional endeavors but also achieve success in their personal lives. In the past the school has been fortunate to host Fortune 500 CEOs like Steve Ballmer, Carlos Ghosn and Rick Wagoner, Nobel laureates like Amartya Sen and senior political leaders to inspire their students and acted quickly to host a leader to leaders such as Mr. Sharma.

Mr. Sharma shot to fame with The Monk Who Sold His Ferrari a book that has been published in nearly 50 countries, has been translated into 42 languages and has appeared on best-seller lists around the world. Harper Collins has just re-released with The Monk Who Sold His Ferrari 10TH Anniversary Edition, this #1 bestseller continues to inspire and engage business people and the general public to get to "world-class".

The Greatness Guide Book 2, which was published in Canada in December 2007 and will be released in Australia and South Africa in June, is a powerful and practical handbook to help people and organizations get to "world-class". Offering additional practical and inspiring anecdotes, tips, lessons, and big ideas, Sharma provides readers with the tools to live their best lives.
